Omnipulse Entertainment will be at the American Film Market (AFM) offering a full slate of four to five animated Motion Pictures, the flagship project of which is The Last Flight of the Champion. LFOTC is a completed project intended to kick off Omnipulse's slate of family friendly animated films. Along with Last Flight of the Champion, Omnipulse will also be offering several other projects; including "Nanopals: Battle for the Microverse", "Magic Toychest" and "Amethysta". The Houston Based Animation Studio, Omnipulse, is making its first ever appearance at this year's AFM. Although Omnipulse has been a regular at NATPE in the past, AFM offers Omnipulse a market for its film projects not available anywhere else.

The Last Flight of the Champion is the story of a young Turtelian, Neddy Nerfhoffer, who just wants to do his part in stopping the evil General Disdain. When Neddy goes to enlist in the Peace Cadets, the main protection force of his planet, he discovers that in some people's eyes he is just too small to be of use and he is rejected. Neddy, along with two other rejects who are also judged as "too small". With these new friends, Hopper and Owen, they set out to form their own army, with "titles and ranks and everything". They create their own military unit with others just like themselves. Searching for a base, Neddy discovers a 1,000 year old Cosmic Marshall Ship, The Champion, whose AI controller is still alive. With the Champion, our heroes set out to confront Disdain only to find that it's harder than they thought it would be to defeat the evil general. Nonetheless, they manage to succeed, learning a lot about themselves along the way.

About Omnipulse

Omnipulse Entertainment, has according to Thomas Douglas, co-founder of Omnipulse "a special asset" in friend and co-founder E. Thomas Ewing. It is E. Thomas' ideas, which form the base for Omnipulse's film projects. Mr. Ewing takes his concept and often turns to his brother, Jeremy Ewing, his writing partner, and together they; says producer and co-founder, Felipe Porres. Mr. Ewing creates a synergy that makes for truly entertaining and often funny scripts. Following the writing process, Mr. Ewing puts on his other hat as Director to move from concept through finished production.
